

I fell in love with painting in high school. My art teachers were incredible, allowing me to paint big, and entering my work into juried exhibitions. I went on to study art at Indiana University, and graduated with BAs in both East Asian Studies and Psychology, which fed my other major interest: holistic health. After college, I ventured abroad to teach English in Japan, volunteered on organic farms in New Zealand and Europe, and explored art, healing, and food of several more Asian countries. I moved to Portland in 2000, taught private Pilates and incorporated hands on energy work into my signature holistic training sessions. In 2010, I retired from pilates instruction and my work became exclusively assisting women to connect to their spiritual power through their bodies and creativity. Becoming a mother in 2004 propelled me back into painting, and catalyzed the most recent series of spacious land and sea scapes. This past year I've focused more on site specific commissions. I work with interior decorators, designers, and lovers of art.

ARTIST STATEMENT

My painting is a means to create a sense of physical space, both for myself and for the observers of my work. The motif of unbroken horizon has occupied a strong, almost universal place in my canvases. They are a memory of place. Thin layers of color are applied to canvas to create depth and translucence in the imagined landscape. My horizons are inspired by the flat planes of the Midwest, and by the vast Oregon coast. I strive to create paintings that people can develop a relationship with in their daily lives.
